Chapter 1 by Karina Arushtova

=====

Hello, my fellow writers. In this story, I want you to push yourself and your creativity beyond any possible limits, let absurdity lead you in whatever duck it does. However, there will be two rules: 1) you should use ONE WORD from the previous chapter. 2) someone or something should use a YELLOW UMBRELLA.

Let the craziness begin!

Richard was staring despairingly at his hands. Two fingers were missing, but there were no cuts, no spots whatsoever at the places there his thumbs had been. A sudden thought struck him. In a matter of seconds, he pushed off both of his shoes and looked intently at his feet. All was well with them. There were five nice pinkish toes. He exhaled, relieved and closed his eyes for a second. When he heard it again. Quick, sucking in sound. Terrified, he opened his eyes. Both his index fingers were missing. He screamed at the top of his lungs. At this moment, the strangest creature appeared holding a yellow umbrella.

Chapter 2 by Windlion

Bryn woke six hours before dawn.

More truthfully, ze climbed out of the tent into the ice-cold alpine air, and was not fully awake until the team had been following their headlamp beams up the trail for three hours.

Then they tucked into their bivy sacks to get some rest for descending, perched on an ice shelf out of the wind . Bryn brought out her yellow hiking umbrella and secured it over her face as a shield against the bright alpine sun.

Someone took a picture and posted it online with the title "Bryn's beach vacation".
